

Albert: A Frog and His Dream

Author: Doug Warren | Illustrator: Keegan Williams

When Albert the tree frog announces that he is going to learn to fly like a bird, his friends and neighbors all think it's a big joke. After all, Albert is very clever, but he's also a little odd, what with his constant daydreaming and odd hobbies. But Albert is determined to prove to his friends—and to himself—that with hard work and a little imagination, anything is possible!

About the Author

Doug Warren was born in Northern California and currently lives in Lake Stevens, Washington, with his two daughters, Sophie and Daphne. A multi-faceted artist, Doug has devoted himself to teaching his two daughters to always chase their dreams, using his gifts for both music and storytelling. Doug's love of both aviation and nature are comfortably at home in the Pacific Northwest. When he's not working as a graphic artist or dreaming up new adventures for Albert, he can be found playing his original music at live shows.

About the Illustrator

Keegan Williams is an independent illustrator from Western Washington. Williams began drawing at an early age, inspired by the steady diet of video games, fantasy novels, and comic books on which he was raised. These days, when not working to make rent at his day job, he enjoys channeling that initial inspiration from video games, fantasy novels, and comic books into his illustrative work.
